

My comments after this.... Cingular allows you to sign up for roll over minutes... contact them today.
My comments in just a moment.... get a Dell computer when you buy a Focus! See your Ford dealer today!

We'll get to my comments in just a second....Are you in? With AT&T wireless, you can be! Go to your AT&T wireless store today for details!

And now my comment... but first, McDonalds has adult happy meals! Get a salad, water and free pedometer for a limited time at your local McDonalds.

Now.... how annoyed were you at having to read that? You have now experienced what we all have every time we turn on the "public" airwaves. By the time I get the information I need, it's too late... traffic jam I hear about after "these messages" is told just as I arrive up to it.

So in a country built on competition, a high powered lobby group ( let's out them for what they are ) wants to protect their interests by stifling creativity. How is that good for the public?

They don't want options, because then broadcasters will have to go back to workless time to buy and sanitize the airwaves with sameness, and blocks of commercials. Boring.

Competition form Satellite Radio is supposed to be a challenge to the Clear Channels, Bonneville and Viacom of the world, not an excuse to exercise their billions, cash in a few favors ( politicians need money to get elected right?) and bully the challengers.

Rageadless of the choice of satellite radio providers ( I have XM myself ), the public is speaking up and the big broadcasters are crying foul. Please.

I want the NAB to step forward and explain what the real motivation is- XM air talent are broadcasters too, right?

The NAB does not speak for them? Sounds a bit selective, so they take their bat and ball and go home rather than embrace change and evolution of their medium.

If the members of the NAB would devote time to their industry, and less to bullying newcomers, this wouldn't be an issue.

The XM folks I'm sure made their decision based on a need they found- that's the beauty of it. Look for ways to improve, not stagnate and count their stock options.

Our contry is based on freedom of choice of all people- not the high powered ones like the NAB and a majority of their membership.

I support XM and hope this petition is voted down.

NAB and their membership... What are you afraid of??????

Well, back to my XM commercial free music and traffic/weather channels.

To the NAB rank and file... well done. "Commercial" radio is just that... more commercials, less radio.
